The Apostleship of the Sea Catholic ministry (AOS) offers a 'beacon of light' to seafarers around the world by providing pastoral support for their 'spiritual, social and material' welfare. In Australia there are 15 AOS port chaplains / centre managers and more than 160 volunteers supporting the estimated 130,000 seafarers who transit the nation's 25 ports each year through these centres.

On July 9, Catholic parishes throughout Australia will celebrate Sea Sunday, when parishioners will be asked to keep seafarers and their families in their prayers and collections on the day will go to support the AOS ministry.

With almost 90 per cent of trade being transported by sea, the maritime industry plays a vital role in the world economy. AOS Australia interim national director Filipino born Fr Roger Manalo CS said the collection was a way of thanking the seafarers for their work in bringing goods that "benefit all Australians", while also supporting the "much needed" work of the AOS chaplains and volunteers.

Working on ships can make these people feel isolated and depressed - even more so when the weather conditions are less than ideal. "That saying 'out of sight, out of mind' rings true for a lot of these workers, so the AOS port chaplain and volunteers provide an important 'connectedness' to the people on the land." Fr Manalo added the role of the AOS had changed over the years in response to advances in technology. Automation means cargo ships can now be unloaded in a matter of hours, compared to several days previously, and consequently seafarers were in port and able to access AOS services for only a short time. "They might be here for only 6 to 24 hours. When they arrive they want to feel welcomed. They have been on the high seas for say 30 days and just seeing the other 10 to 15 crew on board, and so they want to be able to communicate with their families using wi-fi or telephone. "The Catholic crews of the cargo/container ships are predominately of Filipino or Indian origins and often they ask for Mass, a blessing of the ship, or confession. Mostly, seafarers like to be taken to places where they can shop and access other things not available on board," he said. As part of its mission, the AOS also looks after seafarers who are abandoned in port and those who are sick or injured through accidents. For more information about AOS go to <http://aos-australia.org>.

Parish Pastoral Council Summary
Meeting held on Monday 26 June at 2 pm

- The National Church Life Survey (NCLS) Summary report has been received—the overall profile information has been in the newsletters in early June. PPC agreed to think about the evaluate process for the three sections: The people of our church, What we value and prioritise and Our gifts and skills with the view to seeing what the survey actually tells us about our parish and have this as a primary discussion point at the next meeting (on 17 July). Once the preliminary evaluation is undertaken, the communication strategy will be developed including the review of the full profile. The full profile was not received at the time of the meeting but has been received in early July.
- Reminder for Reader and Ministers of Holy Eucharist training in late July and early August.
- Volunteer Code of Conduct and review training will be held after Mass at both locations during late August & September.
- New website is being developed with a view to going live in October 2017.
- Discussion on topics raised at the Open Meeting –with Derek to continue the conversation with individuals.
- Parish Fest in Kilcoy—plans underway re food, entertainment and fun.
